Executive summary:

- This report presents findings of the first pan-EU research into market compliance with the EU's 2015 Interpretative Notice on the origin indication of Israeli settlement products, focusing on the wine sector.
- The research was carried out in November 2019 just as the EU Court of Justice (CJEU) issued its judgment on the Psagot case, which confirmed the legal validity of the Interpretative Notice.
- We found 189 stores across the EU selling 3,089 wines online from settlement-based wineries.
- Key finding: Only 10% of the settlement wines on sale in the EU have a correct or partially correct origin indication online in accordance with EU rules, i.e. "Product of West Bank/Golan Heights (Israeli settlement)".
- 22% of the settlement wines on sale are from the West Bank, 78% from the Golan Heights.
- Among EU Member States, most settlement wines are on sale in the UK, Belgium, France, Germany. West Bank wines in particular are concentrated in the same countries and the Netherlands. In 8 EU states (mainly in the EU's Southeast) we did not find any settlement wines on sale online.
- Most wines with correct origin indication (still a minority) were found in France, Germany, Italy. In the UK and Belgium, which introduced national guidelines on settlement product labelling already before the EU (in 2009 and 2014), virtually no settlement wines are correctly described online.
- The research only covers wine from wineries directly based in settlements: 16 in the West Bank and 4 in the Golan Heights. There are also many wines on sale in the EU from wineries based inside Israel's pre-1967 territory that have some of their vineyards in the occupied territories. These were not included in the research due to greater complexity of determining their exact origin. The same goes for other settlement products such as dates or herbs. In this sense, the research focuses on a relatively easy group of settlement products where compliance levels should be the highest.
- Overall, the findings reveal overwhelming non-compliance across the EU with the Interpretative Notice and with the CJEU ruling. Four years after the EU issued the Notice, consumers continue to be misled about the origin of settlement products and are not able to make an informed choice. This underlines the need for the EU and its Member States to scale up enforcement.

1. EU rules

In November 2015, following requests by a number of Member States of the European Union (EU), the European Commission issued the “Interpretative Notice on indication of origin of goods from the territories occupied by Israel since June 1967”, commonly also known as EU guidance on the labelling of Israeli settlement products.¹

According to the Interpretative Notice, the origin indication for products from Israeli settlements in the occupied territories should state “Product from the West Bank (Israeli settlement)” or “Product from the Golan Heights (Israeli settlement)” or equivalent. It must not state “Product of Israel” or merely “Product of West Bank/Golan Heights”, which would be misleading under the EU’s consumer protection legislation. The Interpretative Notice is not a new legislation but a mere clarification of how existing EU legislation applies in the particular case of goods from Israel’s occupied territories.

Four years later, the legal basis of the Interpretative Notice was confirmed by the judgement of the Court of Justice of the European Union (CJEU) issued on 12 November 2019 in the case brought by the Israeli settlement winery Psagot.²

2. Research

Research focus

Just as the CJEU ruling was published, EuMEP conducted the first pan-European research into compliance with the Interpretative Notice at the market level across the EU.

The aim of the research was to examine how the origin of Israeli settlement products is actually described and marked by vendors in EU Member States and to assess the level of compliance with the Interpretative Notice. The research focused on wine, primarily because of the relative feasibility of determining its exact origin as opposed to other settlements products such as dates or herbs.

EuMEP worked with a small team of researchers in Europe and in Israel/Palestine to survey all shops in EU Member States selling wine from Israeli settlement-based wineries online that we were able to find and to verify locations of the relevant Israeli wineries.

We looked at how EU-based stores selling settlement wines online indicated their origin on their websites as well as at the labels on the wine bottles in cases where their photos were available on those websites. We counted every wine product offered for sale as one wine.

The research was carried out with maximum scrutiny and reflects the situation as of November 2019. We appreciate being notified about any information that adds to or contradicts our findings at info@eumep.org.

² “Judgment in Case C-363/18 Organisation juive européenne, Vignoble Psagot Ltd v Ministre de l’Économie et des Finances”, Court of Justice of the European Union, 12 November 2019.

Origin indication: correct, partially correct, incorrect

According to the Interpretative Notice, the origin indication for settlement products should state “Product from the West Bank (Israeli settlement)” or “Product from the Golan Heights (Israeli settlement)” or equivalent.

Where the origin indication for settlement wines was equivalent to the above formulations, we considered it correct, i.e. compliant with the Interpretative Notice. In cases where the origin indication mentioned “Israeli settlements” or “occupied territory” but did not mention the West Bank or the Golan Heights or actually stated Israel as the country of origin, we considered such indications as partially correct. In all the other cases where the indication stated Israel or only the given territory (Golan Heights) or a wine region (Galilee, Judea, etc.) or did not provide any origin, we considered those incorrect, as long as there was no mention of “Israeli settlements” or equivalent as required by the Interpretative Notice.

We focused primarily on origin indication in the online descriptions. As for the labels on the bottles, only the front labels are visible online in most cases. Although the front labels sometimes state “Wine from Israel” and similar, the main origin indication is provided on the backside labels which are visible online only in a small number of cases.

Examples of correct and incorrect origin indications on the websites and on the bottles are provided in Annex 3.

Geographical scope

The research only focused on wine from Israeli wineries directly based in settlements in the territories occupied since 1967. For the purposes of this paper, “settlement wine” refers to wine produced by these wineries. Under the EU rules, all such wine should be labelled as originating from settlements as spelled out above.

There are also wineries based within Israel’s internationally recognised territory (pre-1967 lines) that have some of their vineyards in the occupied territories.³ According to the EU rules, such wine should also be labelled as originating from settlements, not Israel. We did not include these wineries in the research due to greater complexity of determining the exact origin of their wines. However, they are included in the map of relevant wineries in Annex 1 and in the list of wineries in Annex 2.

3. Findings

Number of stores and settlement wines on sale: We found 189 stores across the EU selling 3,089 wines online from settlement-based wineries. The figure represents the number of individual wines on sale, i.e. not sales volumes. A full list of the shops and wines per each Member State is in Annex 4.

Overall compliance per wine: Only 10% of the wines from settlement wineries have a correct or partially correct origin indication in compliance with EU rules, i.e. “Product of West Bank/Golan Heights (Israeli settlement)”. Within the 10%, 7% are correct and 3% partially correct. This is the key finding of the research, which shows overwhelming non-compliance across the EU with the Interpretative Notice and with the CJEU ruling.

Chart 1 – Overall compliance: origin indication per wine

Total: 3,089 settlement wines on sale in the EU

Overall compliance per shop: We also counted how many stores provide correct origin for the settlement wines they sell. In this case, we considered the stores correct when they provided correct indication for all the settlement wines they sell. When they provided partially correct indication or when they provided correct indication only to some of their settlement wines, we considered them partially correct. The results are similar: only 10% of the shops provide correct or partially correct origin indication. Within the 10%, 3% are correct and 7% partially correct.

Chart 2 – Overall compliance: origin indication per shop

Total: 189 shops found selling settlement wine

West Bank and Golan Heights wines: 22% of the settlement wines we found on sale in the EU are from the West Bank settlements, 78% from the Golan Heights settlements.

Chart 3 – West Bank and Golan Heights wines

Total: 3,089 settlement wines on sale in the EU

Member State breakdown: West Bank and Golan Heights wines

Among EU Member States, most settlement wines are on sale in the UK, Belgium, France, Germany. West Bank wines in particular are concentrated in the same countries and the Netherlands. In 8 EU states (mainly in the EU's Southeast) we did not find any settlement wines on sale online (see Table 1 below).

Chart 4 – Number of settlement wines per country: West Bank and Golan Heights

Number of settlement wines on sale per country (EU total: 3,089)

Member State breakdown: Compliance level per wine

Member State breakdown shows that non-compliance with the EU rules prevails across all Member States where settlement wines are on sale. Most wines with correct origin indication (still a minority) were found in France, Germany, Italy. Paradoxically, we did not find almost any correctly described settlement wines in the UK and Belgium, which introduced national guidelines on settlement product labelling already before the EU (in 2009 and 2014).

Chart 5 – Compliance level per number of settlement wines per country

Number of settlement wines on sale per country (EU total: 3,089)

Member State breakdown: Compliance level per shop

Comparing EU states by the number of stores (rather than by the number of wines) offers a somewhat different perspective. Germany has most shops selling settlement wine, quite a few of them with at least partially correct origin indication, but with a smaller overall number of wine products on offer than UK, Belgium, and France.

Chart 6 – Compliance level per number of shops per country

Number of stores selling settlement wine per country (EU total: 189 stores)

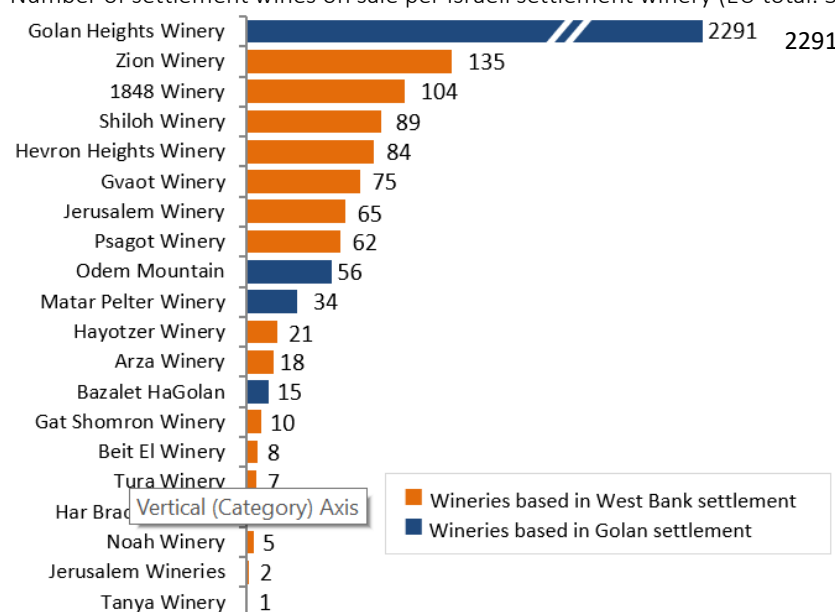

Breakdown per winery

More than two-thirds of all settlement wines on sale in the EU in the come from the Golan Heights Winery. However, the next 7 settlement wineries with most wines on sale in the EU come from the West Bank – including the Psagot winery which initiated the CJEU case. Once again, the figures represent the number of wines on sale, not sales volumes.

4. Legal context

CJEU ruling

The CJEU judgment in the Psagot case, which is binding on all Member States, legally buttresses the Interpretative Notice and removes any room for doubt about the mandatory nature of the rules. It provides a deeper legal justification that effectively validates, complements and reinforces the Interpretative Notice.

The Interpretative Notice is clear that settlement products must not be marked as products of Israel due to the EU's non-recognition of Israeli sovereignty over the occupied territories. But it does not explain in depth why they must also be distinguished from other (non-settlement) products made in the West Bank or Golan Heights. The CJEU provides the reasoning by bringing in two elements that are not mentioned in the Interpretative Notice: the illegality of the settlements under international humanitarian law (IHL) and the importance of consumers' ethical considerations under EU consumer protection legislation. The illegality of settlements under IHL is, according to the CJEU, a relevant ethical factor that can influence consumers' purchasing decisions. Therefore, the settlement origin needs to be indicated explicitly so that consumers can make informed choices in line with EU consumer protection legislation.

Wine legislation

As mentioned above, the EU's Interpretative Notice does not create new legislation but clarifies how existing laws on consumer protection apply in the case of products from Israel's occupied territories.

In the wine sector, the underlying EU legislation includes further obligations for the authorities to ensure correct origin indication. EU regulations that relate to the labelling and presentation of wine on the EU market state that incorrectly labelled wines should not be placed on the market at all or be withdrawn from it:

Article 52 of Commission Regulation 607/2009 states: *"Products whose label or presentation does not conform to the corresponding conditions as laid down in this Regulation cannot be marketed in the Community or exported."*⁴

Article 62 of Council Regulation 479/2008 adds: *"The competent authorities of the Member States shall take measures to ensure that a [wine product] not labelled in conformity with this [regulation] is not placed on, or is withdrawn from, the market."*⁵

The widespread sale of incorrectly labelled settlement wine evidenced in this report appears to be in breach with these provisions and underscores the need for action by the EU and national authorities.

Trend in origin labelling

Since the publication of the Interpretative Notice, EU consumer legislation has continued to evolve. The trend has been towards more detailed origin labelling for food products, responding to consumer demand for more transparency over where food comes from. In 2018, the European Commission adopted a regulation clarifying how to indicate origin of primary ingredients when it differs from food itself.⁶ Several member states have gone beyond the EU legislation by launching national schemes for mandatory origin labelling in further areas such as milk and meat used in processed foods.⁷ The origin labelling of settlement products also has to be seen in the context of this EU trend towards more transparency for consumers, which is likely to increase the number of instances in which the origin of settlement products must be provided.

⁴ Commission Regulation (EC) No 607/2009 of 14 July 2009 laying down certain detailed rules for the implementation of Council Regulation (EC) No 479/2008 as regards protected designations of origin and geographical indications, traditional terms, labelling and presentation of certain wine sector products.

⁵ Council Regulation (EC) No 479/2008 of 29 April 2008 on the common organisation of the market in wine.

⁶ Commission Implementing Regulation (EU) 2018/775 of 28 May 2018 laying down rules for the application of Article 26(3) of Regulation (EU) No 1169/2011 on the provision of food information to consumers, as regards the rules for indicating the country of origin or place of provenance of the primary ingredient of a food.

⁷ "Mandatory origin-labelling schemes in Member States", European Parliamentary Research Service, September 2018. https://www.europarl.europa.eu/thinktank/en/document.html?reference=EPRS_BRI\(2018\)625182625182)

5. Responsibility for enforcement

Private sector: According to the EU, the responsibility for correct labelling goes as follows: *“The retailer will have to ensure the products have the right indication of origin. In practice it might be that the producer, the exporter or the importer labels the products before or after the export takes place.”*⁸

Member States: As for the responsibility of public authorities, the Interpretative Notice says that *“enforcement of the relevant rules remains the primary responsibility of Member States. According to the case-law, while the choice of penalties remains within their discretion, Member States must ensure that penalties for infringements of provisions of Union law are effective, proportionate and dissuasive.”*⁹

At the Member State level, government agencies such as the French Directorate-General for Competition, Consumer Affairs and Fraud Control (DGCCRF) or the Netherlands Food and Consumer Product Safety Authority (NVWA) are in charge of enforcement. Consumers can file complaints to such authorities if they suspect an incorrect indication of origin on specific products. Some of these agencies have also posted the Interpretative Notice on their websites or communicated about it to their private sector. Beyond this, there seems to have been little if any proactive enforcement of the rules for Israeli settlement products, e.g. by targeted controls of retailers. As this report shows, the effect on private sector compliance so far has been very limited.

EU: Alongside the Member States, the EU level also has an important share of responsibility. According to the Interpretative Notice, the European Commission “ensures, as guardian of the Treaties, compliance with these obligations of Member States if need be by way of infringement proceedings”.¹⁰

The CJEU ruling in the Psagot case adds to the Commission’s responsibility given its obligation to examine legal consequences of the CJEU judgment and ensure its implementation. It is to be seen how the Commission follows up on the CJEU ruling given the gap between the judgment and the practice at the market level, as demonstrated by this research.

Furthermore, the research shows that non-compliance prevails across all Member States where settlement wine is on sale. The pan-EU nature of the problem underlines the need to also address the issue at the EU level rather than leaving it solely to the Member States.

Responsibility of customs and importers

Given the obligation to ensure that incorrectly labelled products are not placed on the market, the European Commission and Member States should look at possibilities to ensure correct origin indication of settlement products at the point of entry to the EU market. Rather than focusing attention only on vendors of settlement products, the authorities should examine ways to address the issue at the level of customs authorities and importers (and by extension, Israeli exporters) in view of the systematic nature of the problem. As there are many vendors but only a few importers of settlement wines, ensuring that the wine bottles are correctly labelled at that point would be more efficient and make it easier for the final vendors to provide correct origin indication on their websites.

6. Other territories

Opponents of EU rules for the labelling of Israeli settlement products sometimes claim that the EU is unfairly singling out Israel and its settlements among other situations of occupation and conflict. Although this is not the focus of the present study, it is worth explaining why those claims do not stand up to facts:

- In Crimea, following the 2014 Russian occupation of the peninsula, the EU imposed a ban on imports of goods unless they have Ukrainian certificates – a much stronger measure than merely ensuring correct origin indication. While Israeli settler winemakers continue to export freely, wineries in occupied Crimea are facing hard time as European and US sanctions lead to spiralling costs and make exports impossible.¹¹
- In Northern Cyprus, EU imports are severely restricted and direct trade is ruled out since a series of earlier CJEU rulings (1994, 2000, 2003) prohibiting EU recognition of Turkish Cypriot certificates of origin.
- In contrast, products from Israeli settlements, which are illegal under international law, continue to be freely imported into the EU with Israeli certificates of origin. The volume of EU imports from Israeli settlements is approximately 15 times higher than imports from the Palestinians living in the same territory under occupation.¹²
- The obligation under EU legislation to provide correct origin labelling applies equally across the board. The Interpretative Notice for Israeli settlement products merely clarifies how EU law applies in this particular case. That clarification does not mean that relevant EU law only applies here. As the Dutch government explained, “[t]here is no exception for Israel or the territories occupied by Israel or for any other country or territory. If a consumer believes that the indication of origin on a product is incorrect, regardless of the country or territory from which it comes, he or she can lodge a complaint”.¹³

7. Conclusion and policy recommendations

Conclusion

The research demonstrates overwhelming non-compliance across the EU with the 2015 EC Interpretative Notice on origin indication of settlement products. Only 10% of settlement wines on sale in the EU have a correct or partially correct origin indication online. This means that EU law continues to be violated and consumers continue to be misled about the origin of settlement products, four years after the publication of the Interpretative Notice. The CJEU ruling in the Psagot case legally buttresses the Interpretative Notice and thus makes the gap between the rules on paper and the market-level practice level even starker. The systematic nature of the breach of EU rules evidenced in this report underlines the need for both the European Commission and Member States to scale up enforcement and close the compliance gap.

Policy recommendations

- The European Commission and Member State authorities should conduct market checks to have their own assessments of the level of (non-)compliance with the Interpretative Notice.
- The European Commission should examine legal consequences of the CJEU judgment and ensure its implementation.
- Given the cross-departmental nature of the issue, the European Commission should coordinate internally among the relevant Directorates-General (including DGs Justice, Health and Food Safety, Agriculture, Trade, Taxation and Customs Union, Legal Service) to come up with measures to scale up compliance.
- The European Commission and Member States should raise the issue in the relevant Council working group – such as the Working party on consumer protection and information or the Working party on foodstuffs – to remind Member States of their obligations and discuss ways to scale up compliance.
- Member State authorities in charge of consumer protection should enforce the Interpretative Notice proactively by conducting targeted controls of importers and retailers selling settlement wines and other settlement products. The European Commission should encourage Member States to do so.
- The European Commission and Member States should look at ways to ensure correct origin indication of settlement products at the point of their entry to the EU and examine the responsibilities of customs authorities and importers in this regard.
